Title: We get the sculpture we deserve: Martin Luther King has been decapitated for the 'swarm'.

Publisher: Unherd.com

Place Published: WWW

Year: 2023

Edition: Digital Only

Item Type: WWW

Description: Thought prevoking online essay on the subject of public sculpture.
HARRINGTON discusses the recently unveiled sculpture,
The Embrace, sited in Boston to honour Martin Luther King and his wife Coretta Scott King. General discussion of the potential pitfalls of public commissions for artists, noting that post-war sculpture mavens Moore and Hepworth reflected a world stripped bare of anything too heroic, figurative, or ideological: one that had shed its dangerous fixation with the past, and pointed only toward a clean, innovative, universalist tomorrow.
Notes political arguments for removing statues from public sites for moral issues. No Moore illus.

Title: How a now-defunct council scheme helped bring council scheme helped bring Henry Moore's art to the capital.

Publisher: Stuff.co.nz
Place Published: New Zealand
Year: 2023
Edition: Digital only
Item Type: WWW
Description: Thoughtful article marking the 40th anniversary of the Wellington Sculpture Trust. Notes that the Wellington City Council set up its Arts Bonus Scheme in 1983 to control the changing fabric of the inner city by offering building incentives to developers in exchange for the commissioning of public art, amenities, or open spaces. States that the Sculpture Trust's founding Trustee, Dr Ian Prior was the driving force behind the ambition to bring a Moore work to the city and traveled to the UK in June 1986 to meet with HMF and Moore, shortly before the artist's death. Moore's Bronze Form 1985 bronze (LH 652d) was selected. Notes the original cost was £300,000. The work was unveiled in April 1988 at Midland Park in partnership between the council, the Sculpture Trust and Fletcher Challenge. The work was later moved to the Botanic Garden in December 1995 and rests on the Salamanca Lawn. Artwork is incorrectly referred to as Inner Form throughout. Five images show the work in-situ and close-up.

Year: 2002

Item Type: WWW

Description: Printed 6 March 2002 from Internet www.thestrand.ca. The Strand Online, University of Toronto newspaper review of the Henry Moore Sculpture Centre, Art Gallery of Ontario, from January 19. It was disappointing to find that the major works that occupied the Sculpture Centre haven't been added to or altered. I don't even think they've been moved. Instead... the AGO has pulled out photos working models and scaled-down maquettes to give the Centre an added focus on the process of the sculptor alongside the obvious import of his works... Another frustration comes from the fact that many of the new displays seem geared towards children".
