Description: Art from the South Seas island groups in the Bismark Achipelago in Western Melanesia, covering four major geographical and cultural groupings: New Ireland, New Britain, the Admiralty Islands and the Western Islands. 61-64 reference to Moore's visits to the British Museum: Moore's interest in African and Oceanic sculptures at the British Museum; Malangan carvings; New Ireland carvings; Anthony Caro; non-Western sculpture; Greek sculpture; West African wood carvings; Chola bronzes in South India.. Moore quoted New Ireland carvings made a tremendous impression on me through their use of forms within a form. I realized what a sense of mystery could be achieved by having the inside partly hidden so that you have to move around the sculpture to understand it. I was also staggered by the craftmanship needs to make those interior carvings. The so-called primitive peoples were often as advanced in technique as the more developed societies. The painting of these pieces is very attractive but for me decoration on sculpture can be a distraction from the impact of the three-dimensional form ". Illus of Upright Internal /External Form 1952-53 bronzo =/is /1 Ll 206) and טוטוובש</ו> (בח בשט) מווע Internal/External Forms c. 1935 drawing (HMF 1226). Moore talks of New Ireland sculptures he has collected: "the New Ireland peices are sculptural loose and inventive. Heads and figures often include fishes and birds in the same piece. My most recent piece came to me without a stand. It is a vertical peice with a pig's head a bird and a fish. . . it is closed and open-linear and solid. And looking at it it has so much presence it gives me a standard to attain in my own work". Moore's Helmet< /i> cited as the most brilliant exploitation of the New Ireland notion of enclosed form."
